Chronological table of the English language

date and period	historical development	extracts from period texts
AD 450 Old English	English develops from the languages of the West Germanic tribes (Angles, Saxons, and Jutes) who invade Britain in the 5th and 6th centuries and drive the Celtic-speaking population north and west.	Hwæt, wē Gār-Dena in géardagum Hear: We the Spear-Danes in days of yore þeodcyniga þrym gefrūnon the people's kings' glory have heard tell of hū þā æbelingas ellen fremedon how those princes deed of bravery performed
597	Arrival of St Augustine and his missionaries marks beginning of the conversion of the English to Christianity. Many religious terms are borrowed from Latin.	(Hear! We have heard tell of the glory of the Danish kings in days of yore, and of how those princes performed deeds of bravery!)
900	The invasions by the Danes and Norwegians in the 9th and 10th centuries introduce a large number of Norse words into English. The West Saxon dialect emerges as the main form of Old English and is used in the literature of the period.	Beowulf (mainly W Saxon) 8th century, written down late 10th century
1100 Middle English	After the Norman Conquest French is used as the language of government, business, and the ruling classes for 200 years. The grammatical endings of nouns, verbs, and adjectives in Old English become simplified.	When that Aprill with his shoures soote The droghte of March hath perced to the roote, And bathed every veyne in swich licour Of which vertu engendred is the flour By
1300	By the 14th century the East Midland dialect of London emerges as the standard form of English and is used as the literary language.	power flower
1400	Henry IV (1399–1413) is the first English-speaking king to rule since 1066.	Chaucer, Canterbury Tales , General Prologue (SE Midland late 14th century)
1500 Early Modern English	The spread of printing (1475 onwards) helps stabilize the written language so that it becomes suitable for serious literary works (eg Tyndale's translation of the New Testament in 1525).	To be, or not to be, that is the question, Whether tis nobler in the minde to suffer The slings and arrowes of outrageous fortune, Or to take Armes against a sea of troubles, And by opposing, end them.
1600	The revival of interest in Classical Latin and Greek leads to many learned words being introduced. The 'great vowel shift' that began in Chaucer's day brings about major changes in pronunciation (Chaucer's pronunciation of house probably rhymed with goose , Shakespeare's with grass).	Shakespeare Hamlet (2nd Quarto 1604)
1700 Later Modern English	Samuel Johnson's first major English dictionary (published 1755) attempts to fix and refine the language further.	I have protracted my work till most of those whom I wished to please, have sunk into the grave, and success and miscarriage are empty sounds: I therefore dismiss it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise.
1800	The growth of British colonial power up to the late 19th century leads to the spread of English as a world language and the emergence of distinct varieties of English in countries like North America, South Africa, and Australia.	Samuel Johnson, Preface to A Dictionary of the English Language (mid 18th century)
1900 Present-day English	Present-day English is almost an international language, spoken, either as a first or second language, in most parts of the world. It has borrowed words from countless other languages, and the boom in science and technology has led to the creation of large numbers of new words, many of them derived from Latin and Greek. English today is richer than ever before, but, like all living languages, it is still in the process of changing.	British Airways is considering introducing gambling, such as bingo and fruit machines, on long-haul flights in an attempt to win passengers. As the fight for passengers and financial survival hots up among international airlines, the company has commissioned market research on various forms of in-flight entertainment. (From a news report, 1981; the passage contains at least 12 words, or senses of words, unknown in Shakespeare's time)

English imported

English contains words derived, directly and indirectly, from over 100 languages, besides owing a great deal to Latin, German, French and Greek. Sources of some of these borrowings are shown with approximate dates of their introduction into English.

Making Laws

In the UK law is made by legislation or by case law

Legislation

Supreme legislative authority is vested in Parliament and Bills must go through both houses and have the Royal Assent before they can become Acts of Parliament. Bills can be presented in either House, but usually start in the Commons. They may be presented on behalf of the government or by a private member, though fewer of the latter reach the statute book.

In the case of Public General Acts, the procedure is as follows

Delegated legislation is made by subordinate authorities acting under the authority of parliament

Orders in council

made at a formal meeting of the Privy Council and the monarch

Statutory instruments

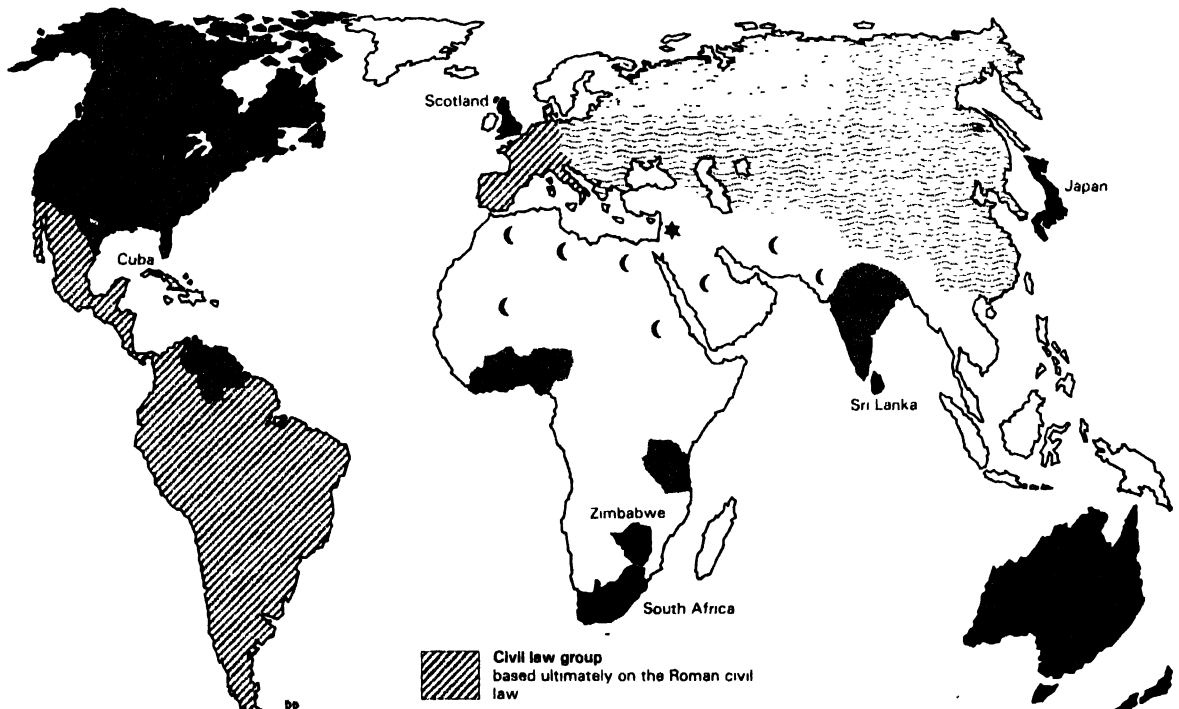

made by ministers for specified purposes

Bylaws

made by local authorities and other public bodies

Case law

This is based on judicial precedent. A decision of a superior court is binding on the courts beneath it and sometimes on itself. It is the principle behind the decision which constitutes the binding precedent.

-  Civil law group based ultimately on the Roman civil law
-  Common law group based chiefly on the common law of England
-  Socialist group new legal codes based upon Marxist philosophy, but with traces of civil law
-  Hybrid systems basically civil law, but heavily influenced by common law ideas and rules

Religious systems

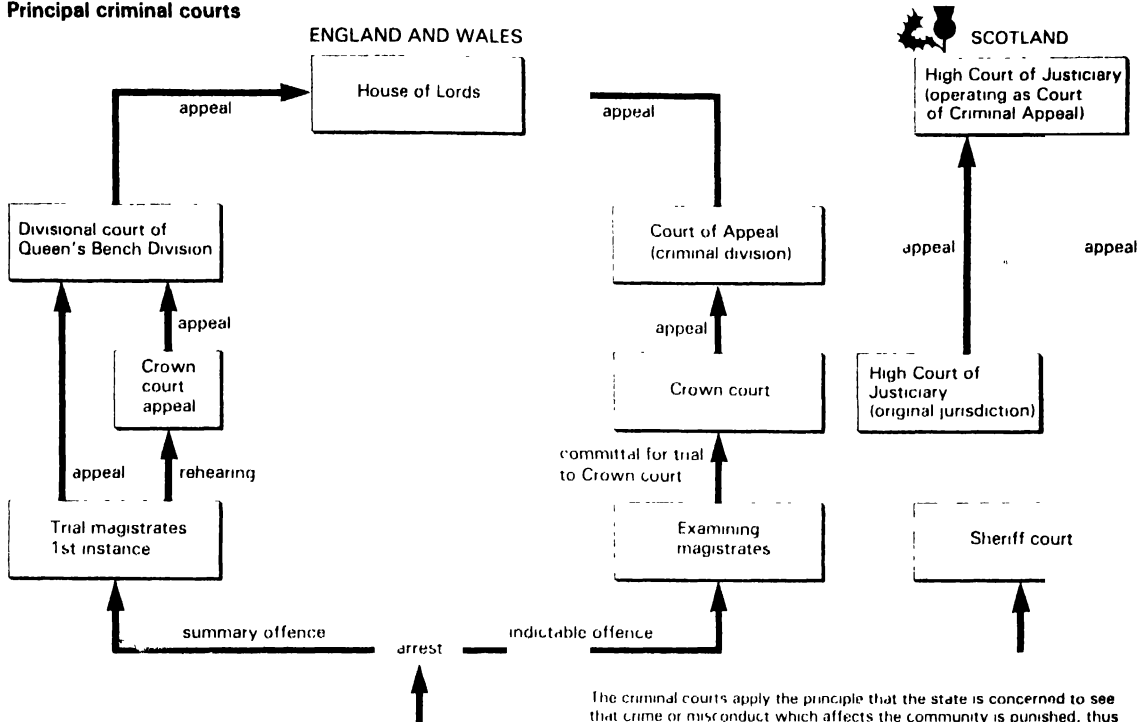

Religious systems may be influenced by the common law, civil law and/or socialist law

-  Islamic law
-  Hindu law
-  Jewish law

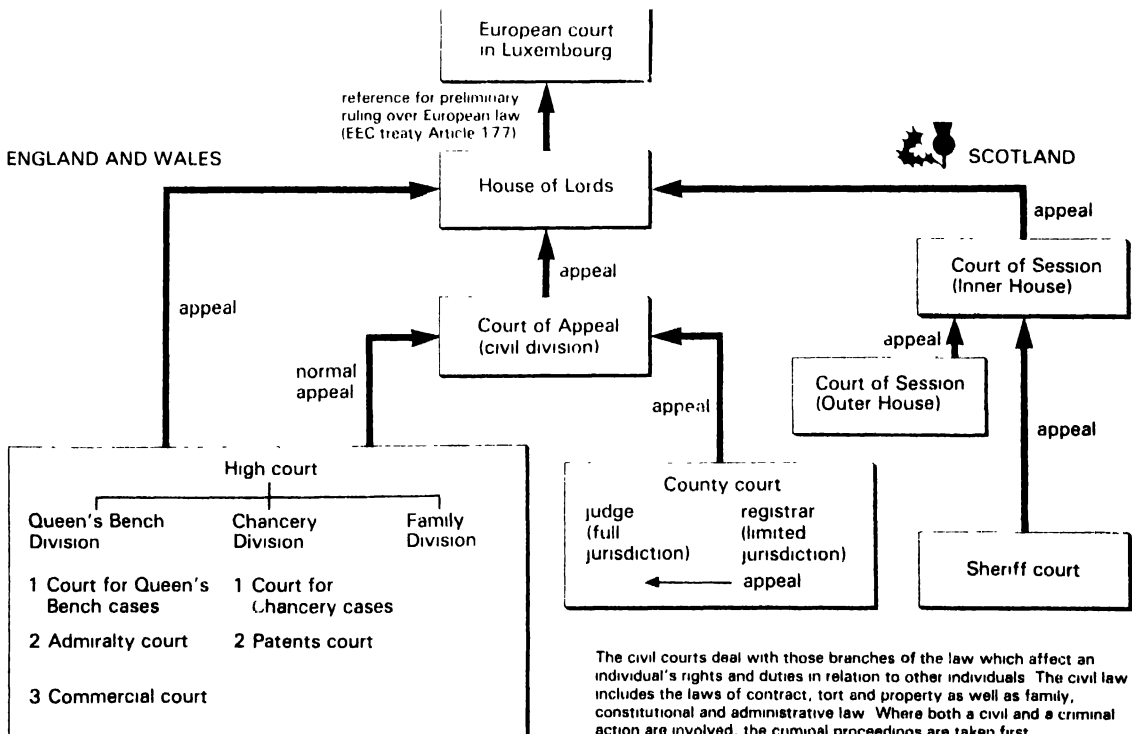

Systems of law

Comparative law studies have grouped the main world legal systems into families, whose members resemble each other in institutions and methods, usually as a result of a common history or borrowing.

Development of a marsupial mammal

After a six-week gestation, the kangaroo gives birth to a tiny undeveloped offspring, which crawls to its mother's pouch and attaches itself to a nipple. When sufficiently developed the young kangaroo makes excursions from the pouch, but will return to suckle until it is a year old.

Development of a placental mammal

The young of placental mammals are nurtured and protected inside the mother during early development. Continuous nourishment and oxygen pass from the mother to the embryo via the placenta. As a result, the offspring are born at a more advanced stage of development than marsupial offspring. ➔ REPRODUCTION

Oviparity

Birds and many reptiles are oviparous: the young develop and hatch from eggs outside the mother's body. In general, oviparous species lay large numbers of eggs in order that some of their offspring might survive

crocodile hatching from egg

Ovoviviparity

Some lizards and snakes are ovoviviparous: the young develop in eggs inside the mother's body and hatch at, or just after, laying. Offspring produced ovoviviparously are less vulnerable to climatic variations and predation than those produced oviparously.

puff adder and young

Viviparity

Most mammals, some reptiles, and a few fish are viviparous: the young develop inside the mother and are born in an active state. A giraffe is well-developed at birth as it must run with the herd, soon after, in order to survive. Rabbits, on the other hand, are born blind, naked, and helpless in the protection of the burrow.

magnet /magnit/ n 1a LODESTONE 1 b a body (of iron, steel, etc) that has an (artificially imparted) magnetic field external to itself and attracts iron 2 sthg that attracts [ME magnete, fr MF, fr L magnet-, magnes, fr Gk magnēs (lithos), lit., stone of Magnesia, ancient city in Asia Minor] magnet-, magneto- comb form magnetic force; magnetism, magnetic <magnetolectric> <magneton> [L magnet-, magnes]

magnetic /mag'netik/ adj 1a of magnetism or a magnet 1b (capable of being) magnetized 2 working by magnetic attraction 3 possessing an extraordinary power or ability to attract or charm – magnetically adv

magnetic equator n ACLINIC LINE

magnetic field n a region of space (near a body possessing magnetism or carrying an electric current) in which magnetic forces can be detected magnetic flux n lines of force used to represent magnetic induction  PHYSICS magnetic needle n a slender bar of magnetized iron, steel, etc that when freely suspended indicates the direction of a magnetic field in which it is placed and that is the essential part of a magnetic compass magnetic north n the northerly direction in the earth's magnetic field as indicated by a horizontal magnetic needle magnetic pole n either of 2 small nonstationary regions in the N and S geographical polar areas of the earth or another celestial body towards which a magnetic needle points from any direction magnetic resonance n the resonant vibration of electrons, atoms, molecules, or nuclei when in a magnetic field in response to radio waves at particular frequencies magnetic storm n a marked local disturbance of the earth's magnetic field, prob related to sunspot activity magnetic tape n a ribbon of thin paper or plastic with a magnetizable coating for use in recording sound, video, etc signals  COMPUTER, SYMBOL magnetism /magnə'tiz(ə)m/ n 1 (physics dealing with) a class of physical forces and interactions that includes the attraction for iron shown by a permanent magnet or an electromagnet and is believed to be produced by moving electric charges 2 an ability to attract or charm magnetite /magnə'tiet/ n iron oxide occurring as a black mineral strongly attracted by a magnet – magnetitic /magnə'titik/ adj

magnetize, -ise /-tiez/ vt 1 to attract like a magnet 2 to cause to be a magnet – magnetizable adj, magnetizer n, magnetization /-'zaysh(ə)n/ n magneto /mag'neetoh/ n, pl magnetos an alternator with permanent magnets (formerly) used to generate a high voltage for the ignition in an internal-combustion engine [short for magnetolectric machine]

magneto- see MAGNET- magnetohydrodynamic /mag'neetoh-hiedroh'die'namik/ adj of or being phenomena arising from the motion of electrically conducting fluids in the presence of electric and magnetic fields – magnetohydrodynamics n pl but sing or pl in constr magnetometer /magnə'tomitə/ n an instrument for measuring magnetic intensity, esp of the earth's magnetic field – magnetometry /-'tri/ n, magnetometric /-toh'metrik/ adj magneton /magniton, mag'neton/ n a unit in which the magnetic moment of a particle (e.g. an atom) is measured [ISV magnet- + -on] magnetopause /mag'neetoh,pawz/ n the outer boundary of a magnetosphere [magnetosphere + L pausa stop – more at PAUSE] magnetosphere /-'sfia/ n a region surrounding a celestial body, specif the earth, in which charged particles are trapped by its magnetic field – magnetospheric /-'sferik/ adj

magnetostriktion /-'striks(h)ən/ n the change in the dimensions of a ferromagnetic body caused by magnetization or demagnetization [ISV magnet- + -striktion (as in constriction)] – magnetostriktive /-'striktiv/ adj, magnetostriktively adv

magnetron /magnitron/ n a thermionic diode that is used with an externally applied magnetic field as a high-power microwave oscillator (e.g. for a radar transmitter) [blend of magnet and -tron]

Magnificat /mag'nifikat/ n (a musical setting of) the canticle of the Virgin Mary in Luke 1 46–55 [ME, fr L, (it) magnifies, fr magnificare to magnify; fr the first word of the canticle]

Clefs

The C clef is called the alto clef or the tenor clef, depending on where it is placed on the staff. The positions of middle C on the alto and tenor clefs are shown.

Notes and rests, and their values

Each note is played or sung exactly half as long as the one in the row above.

When a note has a dot placed after it, it is held for exactly half as long again.

Accidentals

Accidentals are notes that are outside the key indicated by the key signature.

Grace notes are decorative notes before a main note, if they have a stroke across the tail (acciaccaturas) they are played as quickly as possible, but if not (appoggiaturas) they are of the same length as the main note.

The nervous system

Correlation areas of the brain

The nervous system is divided into two parts: central, comprising the brain and spinal cord, and peripheral, comprising cranial, spinal, and autonomic nerves. The brain is the centre of coordination and thought and is responsible for interpreting and correlating stimuli. Certain areas govern specific functions as shown in the diagram above. The 12 pairs of cranial nerves supply the muscles of the face and eyeballs, and provide pathways for sensations of hearing, smell, taste, and vision. The autonomic nervous system regulates 'automatic' activities such as breathing, heart action, and digestion. The 31 pairs of spinal nerves emerge along the length of the spinal cord and are concerned with activities of different parts of the body. Each spinal nerve divides into two roots, motor and sensory, along which reflexes pass.

The reflex response

If a painful stimulus, such as a flame, touches the skin, messages are sent along the sensory nerve to the spinal cord where the motor nerve immediately instructs muscles to remove the part from potential harm.

Skin

Sensory organs relay the sensations they receive to the brain where these messages are synthesized into consciousness of the world around us

1 Arabic numerals from 1,000 to 9,999 are often written without commas or spaces (1000, 9999). Year numbers are always written without commas (1783).

2 The Roman numerals are written either in capitals or in lower case letters (VIII or viii).

3 The Arabic symbols for the cardinal numbers may be read as ordinals in certain contexts (January 1 January first, 2 Samuel Second Samuel). The Roman numerals are sometimes read as ordinals (Henry IV - Henry the Fourth), sometimes they are written with the ordinal suffixes (XIXth dynasty).

Magic squares

In a magic square the numbers in each row, column, and diagonal add up to the same total; 15 for the smaller square and 34 for the larger one. In the larger magic square, any smaller 2 by 2 square contains 4 numbers that also add up to 34.

Prime numbers (2, 3, 5, 7, 11, 13, 17, 19, ...)

A prime number is one that only gives a whole number when divided by 1 or itself but leaves a remainder when divided by any other number.

Rational numbers (all the whole numbers and fractions such as $\frac{1}{2}$, $1\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{3}{4}$).

A rational number is any number produced by dividing any whole number by any other whole number.

Irrational numbers ($\sqrt{2}$, $\sqrt{3}$, π , ...)

An irrational number is a number that is not a rational number, it cannot be produced by dividing one whole number by another.

Transcendental numbers (eg π).

A transcendental number is an irrational number that is not the answer to any equation.

Complex numbers

A complex number is a number that contains the square root of -1 (i) and has the general form $x + iy$ where x and y can be any sort of number except for a complex number.

Fibonacci sequence (0, 1, 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 13, 21, 34, 55, ...)

Each number in the sequence is produced by adding together the two previous numbers. All the numbers in the sequence are called Fibonacci numbers. There are many examples of these numbers in nature, for example the arrangement of leaves in a spiral up a stem is usually such that the number of leaves between two positions where a leaf lies exactly above another on the stem is a Fibonacci number.

Numbers

These are examples of ancient systems of numerals of which only the Chinese and Arabic are still in limited use. The numerals now usually used in Western Europe and all over the world were derived from the Arabic system which was one of the first systems to include a symbol for zero.
